

First-Time User Experience

Notes - Shradha

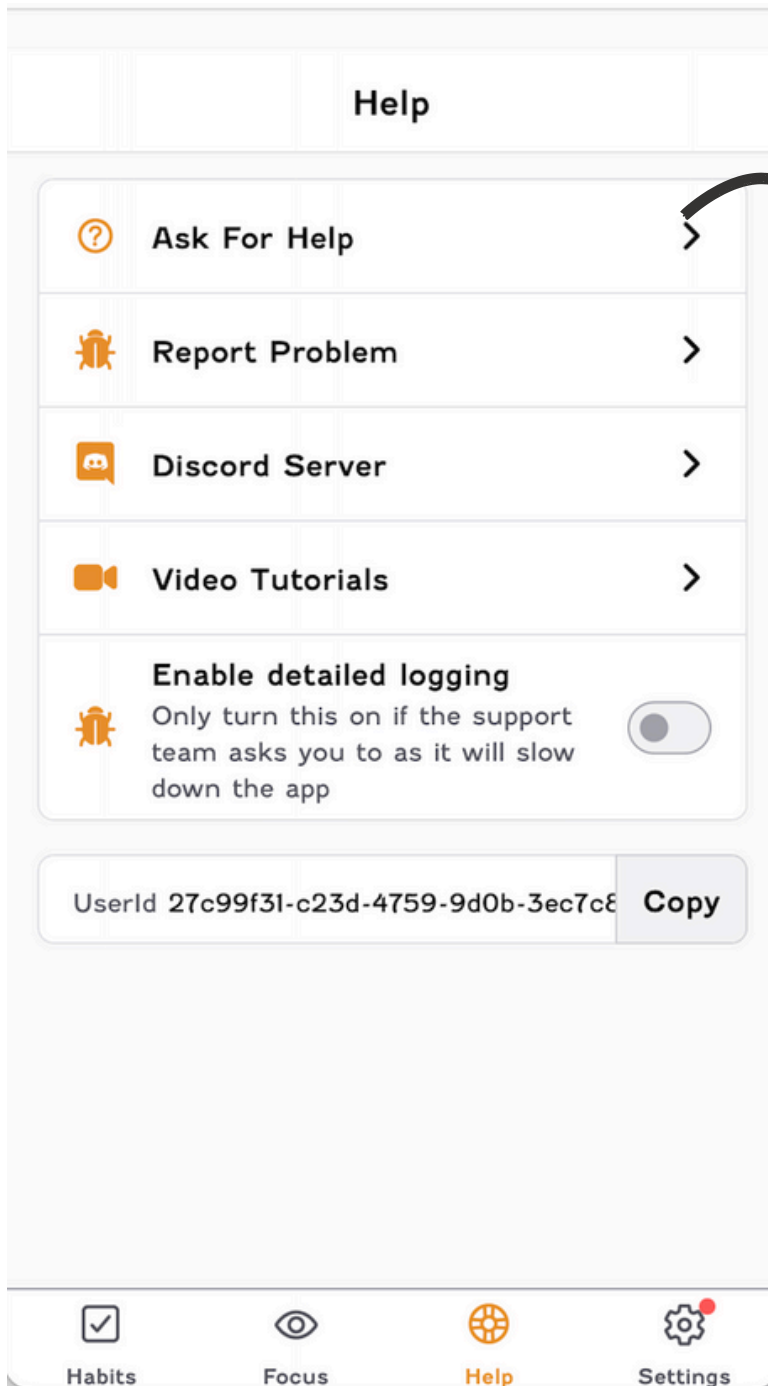

1. Unable to see evening routine

Can only see the morning routine, although the app is being accessed at 2.40pm.

Suggestion: There can be drop down options for both morning and evening routine allowing to see both

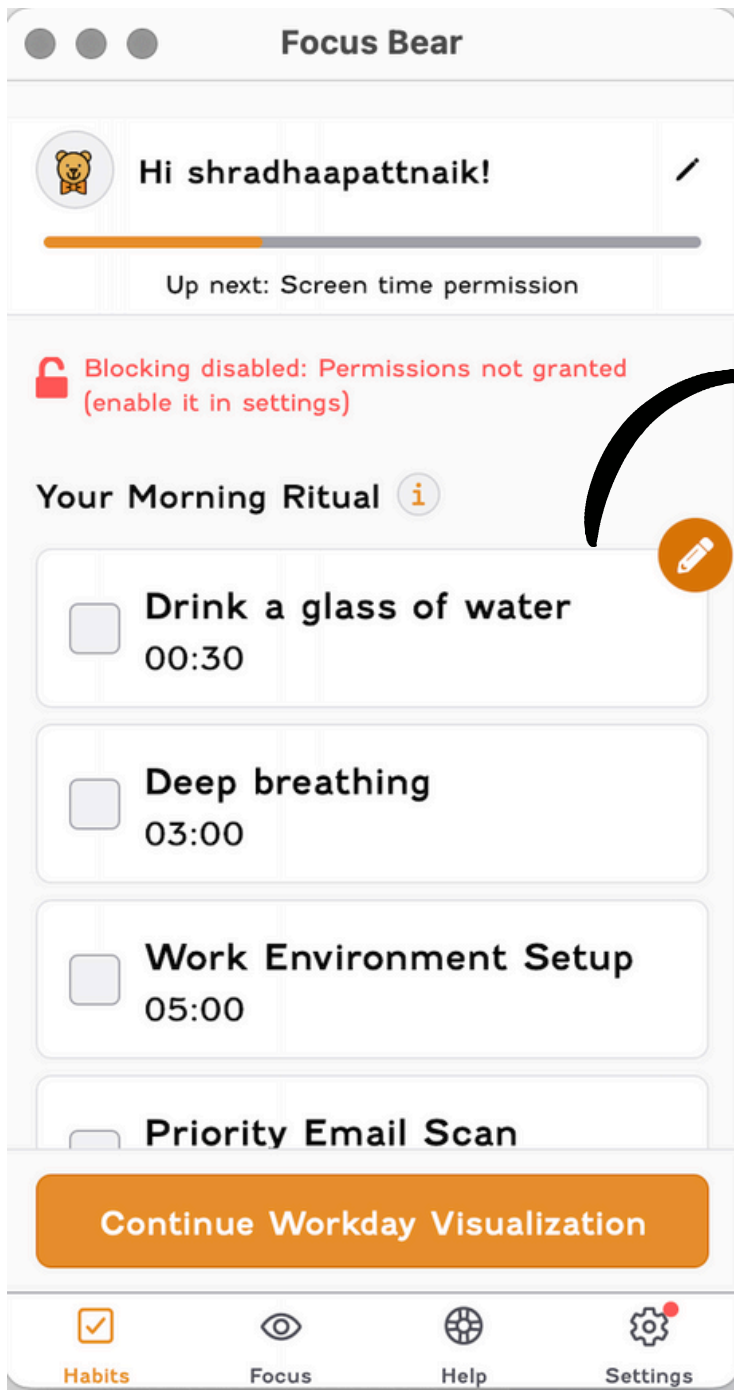

2. It would be beneficial if there was a direct way to edit my Habits rather than having to go through settings

As a new user there will be constant changes being made to the habits, timings, routine and app blockings.

Thus having it as a seperate button or area would be easier to navigate

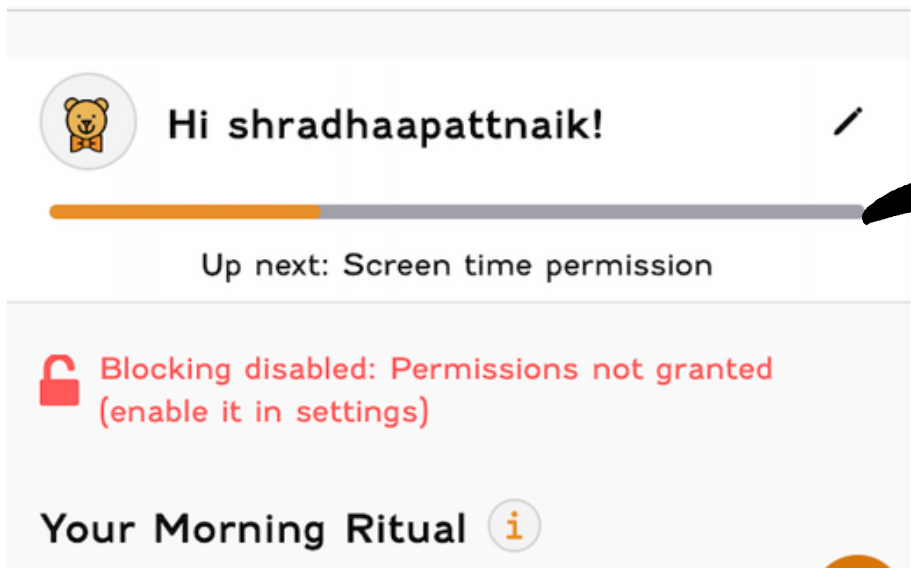

3. Laying out the morning ritual tasks in chronological order

Displaying all the tasks that need to be completed in chronological order and also perhaps having a time of the day to complete the task/s would be beneficial. It could be an element that users add themselves or with the help of AI.

As having all the tasks lined up can create an overwhelming experience for the user making them think they have multiple things to complete

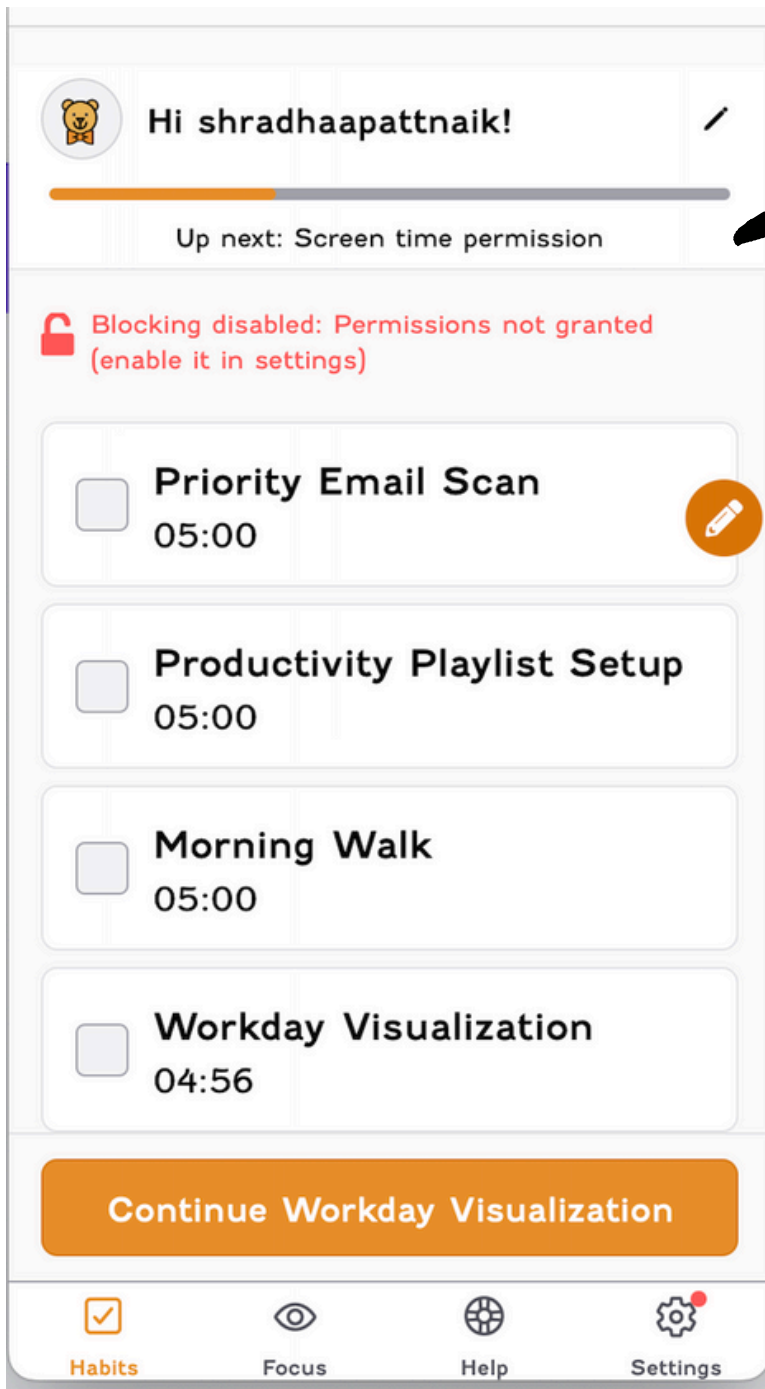

4. Displaying a meter of how much tasks there are left of the routine

Similar to how the progress of setting up the account is displayed, it would be beneficial if a meter like this was displayed to represent how much of the tasks have been completed along with a percentage of tasks completed or remaining.

It could act as a motivation for users and act like a visual display too.

5. Displaying all content in the same font and colour

Using different colours but within the colour palette could help the app be more visually appealing, likewise with fonts.

However, not sure if it could act as a distraction towards its main customer base, those with ADHD and autism.
